Council Adopts New Ordinances: Yes to Cannabis, No to Roosters

by Rick Pressler

The Roosevelt Borough Council adopted two significant ordinances at its meeting of July 21: Ordinance No. 2025-10 limits the keeping of chickens within the Borough to a maximum of twelve animals and prohibits the keeping of roosters; and Ordinance 2025-11 permits cannabis cultivation.

Microbusiness Cannabis Cultivation Approved

The cannabis ordinance, an amendment to zoning regulations for the R-Ag/400 zone (locations reserved for agricultural use) permits cultivation of cannabis within the Borough, while maintaining the prohibition of all other cannabis businesses. The ordinance limits cultivation to a single licensee and includes several key measures to address concerns about quality of life impacts, including greenhouse materials and size, setbacks and fencing, odor and noise mitigation, the shielding of lighting to prevent impacts on adjacent properties, and security. The ordinance has been a subject of substantial debate within the community over the past several months, and it appears that provisions within the adopted ordinance respond to concerns raised during public comments at Council meetings.

Both state and borough licenses will be required to operate a cannabis business. The initial borough application fee is $5,000, with an annual renewal of $2,500. The borough has also established a 2% Local Cannabis Transfer Tax on sales and a Local Cannabis User Tax at the same rate. The ordinance defines a range of fines for violations.

For more detail about key provisions, see page 3.

Chickens by the Dozen, Roosters Banned

Ordinance 2025-10 clarifies and limits the right of residents to keep chickens on residential properties and prohibits the keeping of roosters. The ordinance, which appears to come in response to complaints by some residents, establishes regulations which appear to balance residents' desire to keep chickens with the rights of their neighbors to be protected from free-ranging chickens and the sound of roosters.

To keep chickens, residents must now obtain a zoning permit from the Zoning Officer. Renters are required to show written permission from the property owner. In addition to the permit, an annual license fee of $25 is required.

The ordinance sets a limit of twelve chickens per residential lot and entirely prohibits roosters, although any residents with more than twelve chickens as of June 1, 2025, or who own a rooster, are permitted to keep their animals for the remainder of the animals' "natural life." Other regulations detail management:

- Chickens must be kept within property boundaries.
- Chicken feed must be stored in a covered, secured metal container off the ground to avoid attracting vermin or rodents.
- Chickens cannot be kept for consumption or sale, and slaughtering is prohibited within the borough.
- All structures and fencing for chickens must comply with the borough's design and zoning standards, and construction permits must be obtained if required.

The "Chicken Ordinance" was the subject of much public interest, and sparked a lively public debate over the past several months. Posters appeared on the Borough

Roosevelt is 90?

By Albert Hepner

B.B. must have had a dream. He had been gallivanting all over the U.S.A. and thought this piece of land would be a great place for people to live and develop a collective approach to life. He hoped to get the rich people to agree to pockets of poverty. Just take a small section of the fertile country and have friendly folks agree to work the land so all poor folks could benefit from a rich earth. People could plow this fabulous surface and ready it for growth. Vegetables, fruits, and animals were already part of the environment, already hanging out doing nothing in 1935.

So B.B. went to visit the Roosevelts, folks who owned acres upon acres of this land all over N.Y. State. He figured they wouldn't mind if a few poor folks had a part of what was known as New Jersey to develop for themselves collectively. It might have been a progressive thought, but since few people in the USA knew much about the radical ideas of collectivism, it sounded nice and cute to the Roosevelts.

Think about it: two miles by two miles of dirt and they'd call it a town and work together to grow the necessary food and housing to get about 900 people living a life of luxury. Well BB got it started.

The Roosevelts agreed and helped provide the necessary elements: the property, the people who'd dreamed of living in the countryside, and the federal assistance to meet community needs. For the most part, dreamers picked up on the opportunity to live in the "country" and benefit from the fresh air and to have neighbors who would get on with each other. The "dream" started.

Some people worked on a collective farm, and others began working in a collective coat factory. The latter was started so the town could begin to earn some money while the farms evolved. Consequently, several needle workers from nearby city factories moved to what was then called Jersey Homestead and later renamed Roosevelt .

I moved to Roosevelt in 1962 because my third child was born in NYC in a two-bedroom apartment, so one more room was needed. I should have known what to expect right away. My Aunt Flora who'd lived in Roosevelt since the early 1940s told us a political story from back then. The borough, like all other municipalities in Jersey, would elect a Democratic committeeman and committeewoman as well as a Republican committeeman and committeewoman. The town was over-represented by Democrats and under-represented by Republicans. Out of sheer frustration to find a Republican woman representative, the Republicans asked Flora, an avid Democrat, to run for the Republican representative position. Since no one else was running, she won. Flora had been delighted that she'd be one of two people making the Republican decisions in town. Our family laughed and rejoiced at the political numbers: 890 Democrats vs. 10 Republicans.

The first few weeks that I commuted to NYC for work, my wife would tell me about an older looking man, around 90, who would walk along Pine Drive, our side street, very very slowly. It appeared that every step was painful. As city people, we didn't yet know the small- town collegiality that was commonplace. But my wife wanted to help. She took one of our extra folding chairs and set it up on the edge of our property facing the street that the old man walked back and forth on every day. Two days later she noticed that he stopped and rested on the chair both going and returning. We heard later from a neighbor how nice it was of us to have put the chair out for Moishe who went to synagogue every morning. It was quite a few months later, just before he died, that Moishe thanked us for putting the chair out for him. We had never spoken to him except occasionally to greet him.

Years later, another neighbor on School Lane, who walked the town often, exclaimed "We're on this earth for twelve seconds, say hello to everybody." We were glad we had. E.M.T. were strange initials to city people, so when one of our neighbors told us about his most memorable life-saving event as an EMT, we never forgot. He told about one of our ninety-year-old neighbors on Pine Drive who had called the First Aid for help. Jeff K. was on duty that day. He scooted down Pine, for that's where he also lived, and went to help the injured neighbor who was lying under an empty light fixture and a broken ladder. Jeff asked him what had happened. The injured man explained that the fixture needed a bulb, so he fetched his ladder and went to replace the bulb. The ground was uneven, the ladder was six feet tall, the light fixture was nine feet high, the ladder broke when the ninety-year-old man reached the highest rung. Jeff asked him, "What did you think this was going to get you?" The old man survived.

This incident brings another EMT story to mind. Most of us Rooseveltians probably recall the gas station on Rochdale Avenue. Years ago, our school principal, Mitchell, also served on our First Aid Squad. The typical practice when a First Aid call came in, was to direct it to the Vasseur gas station because everyone knew there would always be someone present to answer it. The gas station was perfectly located across from the First Aid building, and someone could get to the ambulance quickly.

Our wonderful school principal-first aider happened to be visiting Frenchie, the owner of the gas station, who told him that a call had come in for someone to go rescue a person who had gotten hurt at the nudist colony in town. Yes, Roosevelt had a nudist colony off Route 571. Traditionally, the first First Aid responder would be the ambulance driver, so Mitchel who was just across the street from the ambulance and was told who had called, yelled out to Vasseur, "hold up two minutes before you call all responders," so he'd be the ambulance driver who drove the ambulance and just watched his colleagues help the wounded nudist. The nudist survived.

Roosevelt experienced a multitude of tragedies as well wonderful events. Here are some memories of delightful moments from a ninety-year-old survivor. One of the funniest ever was related to Pine Drive. Aaron was a resident of Pine Drive. He was an engineer who worked near New Brunswick. One evening while coming home through one of the foggiest evenings of the year, he stopped in Hightstown to call his wife Evelyn to explain that he'd barely gotten to Hightstown in 90 minutes and that it might take him another hour to get home. He didn't want her to worry any more than she probably was already worrying. When he explained how invisible everything on the road was, Evelyn literally screamed on the phone for him to remember that there was a very nice inexpensive hotel right on Route 130 and not to bother coming home because it was too dangerous. He assured her that he would be extremely careful and would continue his difficult and slow journey because he wanted to be home with her. He apologized for cutting short the conversation but had to get going; it was also the only way he would win that argument.

He got back in his car on Route 130 (the Turnpike had not been built yet) and drove through town to South Main Street heading toward Etra Road. He knew it would be incomprehensible to anyone that he'd want to drive in what turned out to be the foggiest evening of any year. He could barely see five feet ahead of his car. Fog in those years was a common occurrence, but not that thick. Nevertheless he eased his car slowly towards Etra Road and just a few feet before reaching the left turn he'd have to make, he noticed a car heading towards him that hadn't gotten to the corner but had a right turn signal flashing. Hurray, he yelled to himself and slowed down so the other driver would make his turn first and take Etra Road first. He'd be able to drive with another car's lights leading him to Roosevelt. His clever decision reminded him how smart he had been to go on to school and become an engineer. He felt his face smiling continuously thinking how he'd brag to Evelyn about how clever he'd been. After much time had passed of this tedious drive, a drive where he couldn't see anything except the other man's bumper, the car's rear lights suddenly turned red.

Aaron panicked but stopped right on time. He took a deep breath, opened his car door, stepped out, and with the greatest affront screamed at the other driver, who'd also stepped out of his car,

"Why did you STOP? YOU WERE DOING SO WELL?"

"We're in my driveway!!!"

No one ever discovered where the other man lived, but everyone who heard the story laughed hard. And everyone survived!

Pokeweed

By Steve Taylor

This month's article highlights a native species that we need to look out for, Pokeweed, (Phytolacca americana).

Most natives should be encouraged, but there are a few that are not endangered and have characteristics that make them undesirable. Pokeweed is one of those. It is considered a pest. It is native to most of North America. All parts of the plant including the berries are toxic, particularly for young children. Birds are unaffected by the toxins.

This herbaceous perennial grows 4 to 10 feet tall with stems that may vary from green to reddish purple. The leaves are 2 to 5 inches long. The black fruit is about $\frac{1}{4}$ inch across and hangs from the plant in bunches. Birds enjoy the fruit. You might notice the resulting purple spots on your car. In the fall, the plants die down to the ground leaving the very large root to winter over. The seeds can remain dormant in the ground for years before germinating. The plants are usually sufficiently well separated so they can be easily removed with a shovel.

Recycling Reminders

The Roosevelt Environmental Commission would like to remind our fellow citizens of a few recycling tips. All of the following information (and more) can be found in the "Recycling 101" article written by Steve Taylor in the March 2019 Bulletin (available at <http://rooseveltborough-bulletin.org>).

Please remember:

- Do not put items inside of plastic bags in the recycling container; keep them loose.
- Plastic bags can be recycled at local grocery stores.
- Most clean paper can be put out for recycling.
- Cardboard should be flattened. Packaging tape and staples need to be removed.
- Any rigid #1, #2, and #5 plastic, regardless of shape or color, can now be put into your recycle bin, along with glass bottles and jars, cereal and snack boxes, cardboard, office paper, newspaper, magazines, tin, aluminum, and steel cans.

Querida Avó Mimi, (Letters from an Immigrant)

by Catarina Noronha

Querida Avó Mimi,

That's how I start the letters to my granny.

Living away from home is a paradoxical existence. What is home anyway?

I grew up in a small town in Portugal, where my family still lives. As a young adult, I felt very disconnected from that place. I never quite felt I belonged, so I started to travel, hoping to find something I didn't know what it was yet. Later, I found out I was searching for home. I still haven't found it.

The first times I was backpacking alone were an exciting melting pot of feelings and emotions. I was living my own adventures, like a character in a book, creating stories and connecting with people. I loved the freedom of living without a plan: I could leave at any time to anywhere. I could stay in the same place as long as I was happy. During this time, I started to send postcards from the places I visited to one of my grannies, Mimi, who also loves to travel. There was something about the physicality of the process that I found very precious: choosing the postcard, writing it on a train or a bus stop and mailing it, hoping it would get to its destination – the corner of the table in my granny's living room – safely.

Eventually, the excitement was replaced with exhaustion. My body was tired – probably too many nights sleeping in a bus – and my mind and soul were drained. I realized how much I missed my house and my room and how much the sense of a personal space was important for my wellbeing. I recognized how much I missed my people and my friends and how much the sense of community is important for us humans.

Life, later love, made me move to the US and I officially became an immigrant.

In the late 60's, during the fascist dictatorship in Portugal, my grandpa Zé, as thousands of other Portuguese people, immigrated to France searching for a better life. During the 41 years of dictatorship, Portugal had strict borders and was ruled by Salazar and his state police – PIDE. The social classes were highly divided and most of people lived in misery and fear. My grandpa Zé passed away in 2020 and I never talked with him about his struggles during this time, so everything I have are broken reports from his wife – my granny Gracinha – and my imagination. This is a tale as old as time: people leaving their birth place, in search for something. For my grandfather that something was as basic as sustenance for his family. I was lucky enough to always have my basic needs met, so my search was for ideals.

I never really thought about myself as an immigrant until now. I was so used to being in foreign lands that I didn't notice the subtle shift from being a traveler to becoming an immigrant. I am still an outsider. I still don't feel at home.

A few months after the start of my green card application, the Trump administration won the elections and I am living what I learned in history books: fascism is slow and sneaky, pushing the edges of morality disguised as righteous. It divides the many between "us" and "them" while the few profit from it. It uses propaganda, bright colors, and fireworks, and plays with one of the most powerful feelings in human nature: the sense of belonging. Belonging to a home, to a group, to a country.

Being white and European is a privileged place to be, but as we learned from Martin Niemöller, they eventually will come for me.¹ I am an immigrant. I am a radical who believes in the liberation of all people. I am a woman who dares.

Living in the US made me realize the reason why I felt so disconnected from my hometown and my family and friends as a young adult had nothing to do with the place or the people, but rather the lifestyle dominant within western society: the production culture, the consumerism, the general lack of education on politics and the planet. We live in "The Century of the Self"², and I feel I don't belong here.

This piece is the preface for an artist book I am working on, telling the story of becoming an immigrant in my journey searching for home.

RPS Education Foundation Update

by Stephanie Pinney

The students closed out the school year enjoying several grant funded activities! Kindergarten-3rd grade students visited the State Theatre to view a live performance of Underneath the Magical Moon. This theatre experience was brought to life in the classroom the following week, when the visiting artist offered an opportunity for all of the students to engage in acting exercises! Among many educational benefits, improv promotes creativity, empathy, perspective, self-awareness, and helps to build confidence and self-esteem.

We want to take this opportunity to send a heartfelt thank you to our immediate past president Mary Tulloss. Mary brought RPSEF to life in 2013 and poured her heart into ensuring our foundation fulfilled its mission to educate and inspire all students to do their best academically and to become independent and creative thinkers, skillful communicators, and lifelong learners. Mary, your dedication has inspired everyone around you and your incredible contributions will undoubtedly leave a lasting impact on the RPS students. We truly appreciate all your years of service for RPSEF and the community of Roosevelt!

We also thank all of our donors and supporters for your ongoing generosity and backing. We hope everyone is enjoying their summer and look forward to what the next school year will bring!

Little Free Library: take a book, share a book

by Larisa Bondy

Little Free Library is a non-profit organization, spreading the joy of reading nationwide. You may have noticed a few pop-up Rooseveltwide this July.

Thanks to a project conceived by Ellen Silverman while she was heading the Environmental Commission, there are now three in town. Located at the Pine/Tamara triangle, the Homestead Lane Triangle, and the head of the Woodland Trail on Rochdale, they are beautifully painted and filled with books.

Michael Merrit put the Little Library kits together, and they were painted by Yasmeen Atieh, Kendall Lecompte, and Clover Balon. In addition to the free reading inside, viewers can enjoy the artwork on the outside, including nature scenes and landmarks of Roosevelt. Clover Balon who painted the library on the Homestead triangle said, "My inspiration for the box is the beauty of different spots of Roosevelt throughout the day. The different scenes depict how Roosevelt has its beauties through dawn to dusk."

The libraries were "planted" by Dave Teich and Michael Merrit and are set now for growth. Merrit said,

"I hope the neighbors will make these little libraries their own, sharing mind-opening, captivating, and challenging books for all ages." The Rochdale library was intended to be nature-centered, as it is at the head of the trail. All libraries now include books for adults and children to browse, borrow, read, and add some of their own to share.

Shout out to the creators, builders, and artists of this project, bringing the joy of reading a little closer and easier to find for our community.

Caitlin McClain, 3rd Grade Teacher

Both bring incredible passion, talent, and heart to our school community, and we can't wait for students to learn and grow with them.

One of the most exciting additions this year is a brand-new Social-Emotional Learning (SEL) space in our school lobby—made possible by a generous grant from the Roosevelt Public School Education Foundation. This calming, student-focused area will help support our students' emotional wellness and reinforce our new Dragon H.E.A.R.T. core values:

HELP OTHERS, EXPRESS CREATIVITY, ACT WITH KINDNESS, RESPECT ALL, AND TRY YOUR BEST

Whether you're a neighbor, alumni, or community partner, we thank you for being part of what makes Roosevelt Public School such a special place. Here's to another school year filled with creativity, kindness, and community.

Warmly,

Lindsay Perine

Principal, Roosevelt Public School

Buy Fresh, Buy Local – 2025 - Roosevelt, NJ

Why is locally grown food important?

- It tastes better because it's picked when fresh, not harvested in advance for long-distance shipping.
- It's better for your health because fresh food contains more nutrients.
- It's better for the environment because it maintains open space and promotes sustainable practices.
- It's better for the community because it supports and creates a connection with local farm families.
- It's better for the climate because it reduces carbon emissions from long-haul transport of food.
- It's fun!

In Roosevelt, Lawrence and Heidi Mendies offer locally grown food at their farmstand and through their CSA.

Save our Sewers – Don't Flush Wipes

Please do not flush wipes or paper towels down your toilet. Even the wipes that are labeled "flushable" are not treatable in our sewage treatment plant. They clog up the equipment and the repairs are costly.

Please do not pour household grease down your drain. This clogs the sewer lines and the repairs are costly.

Your water/sewer bill reflects the added maintenance costs caused by these wipes and household grease.

Please put your wipes, paper towels and household grease in the trash.

Nature Poem

I am a swimming webbed feet otter.
I wonder what it is like to be a land animal.
I hear clams opening.
I see my pup.
I want to see the world.
I am a swimming webbed feet otter.

I pretend I can go to the bottom of the ocean.
I feel like a mouse.
I touch the sand with my feet.
I worry I might get eaten.
I cry when my pup does.
I am a swimming webbed feet otter.

I understand that something bad might happen.
I say I am smart.
I dream I can swim as far as I want.
I try to keep my friends safe.
I hope I can teach my pup well
I am a swimming webbed feet otter.

PET WASTE POLLUTES OUR WATERS

What can you do to help protect our waters

Pick up after your pets. Properly dispose of pet waste into the trash. Animal waste contains coliform bacteria, which is harmful to our health.

Carry a newspaper or plastic bag to pick up the waste while walking your pet.

When treating your pet and yard for fleas or ticks, check with your veterinarian for safe substitutes. Never dispose of flea dip liquid on the ground or in the storm drain. It should be disposed of as a household hazardous waste.

Visit www.state.nj.us/dep/dshw/rnp/hhwcps for list of county household hazardous waste disposal centers.

Do not feed wildlife such as geese, pigeons, ducks and deer.

Feeding results in more pollution from their waste.
